This livestream shows me engaging in my daily activities, just like anyone else who films their daily lives for Internet publication. There is certainly a dramatic element to this work. You personally may not find the content very interesting, but that does not mean it is not subject to copyright protection. I listed this as a "dramatic" work because it is still a live performance, even if it is improvised.

Starting at 40:14, you can hear some strange noises at one point when I am off camera. These strange noises are, hands down, the most "dramatic" part of the video.

A "drama" is defined by Webster's Dictionary as "a composition ... intended to portray life or character ... usually involving ... emotions through action." See <https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/drama>

This livestream is a composition that portrays my life. Therefore, it is a drama. A very dull drama, mind you, but a drama nonetheless.

Some people are infringing on my copyright, so I must register this copyright in order to maintain suing them. A copy of the Complaint in that lawsuit is being attached for your reference. As of the time of this writing, I am moving forward with the lawsuit pursuant to the exception listed in 17 USC § 411(c), but I still need to move forward with the registration in order to continue with the lawsuit.

So please update my copyright registration ASAP.

Sincerely,
David Stebbins
